

OUR SERVICE

Riding Rangers is a hyper-local delivery service that was founded in the midst of the COVID-19 lockdown in 2020 by two young entrepreneurs, Riya Aggarwal and Anchit Kohli. What started as a social service initiative to deliver oxygen cylinders and food for COVID-19 patients, has now become a thriving business, with partnerships with over 300 organizations and employing more than 350 people.

Delhi-based Riya Aggarwal, 18, and Anchit Kohli, 19, do not have the investment to create a tech-enabled delivery service but that did not deter them from starting a company called Riding Rangers in May. “We thought of starting a delivery service as people weren’t willing to go out and buy things, which was affecting small businesses. So we wanted to fill this gap,” says Aggarwal. Soon they started analysing the market and cold calling companies to understand the problems they were facing. After registering the company, they advertised for delivery riders. They have given employment to 15 people in Delhi NCR, three in Bengaluru and three in Mumbai.
